

An Irish institution with class, character and distinction, to experience the unique ‘craic’ in The Horseshoe Bar is to get a true flavour of Irish life.

Atmospheric and wholly distinctive, the Horseshoe Bar has always been a meeting point for politicians and journalists, sportsmen and movie stars, visiting dignitaries and local personalities since it opened its doors on November 26th, 1957 and was designed by Sam Stephenson. It is handsome and evocative, with Hogarth prints, a white counter top and shining brass, and if its rich red walls could talk they would have some fascinating stories to tell.

Long acknowledged as Dublin’s number one meeting place, The Horseshoe Bar has seen it all down through the years. The bar’s name derives from the shape of its counter – that of a horseshoe – although some think it is through a long association with the racing and hunting set who often sat around the bar counter discussing the form and guessing the odds.

From Bono to Tom Jones, Brendan Behan to legendary Fianna Fail spin-doctor PJ Mara, The Shelbourne’s Horseshoe Bar has attracted dozens of famous personalities. It’s not really so much of a pub than a club. It has been part of the fabric of Irish life. It has seen through its doors some of the most extraordinary people.
